

5. Lions Den: this large pride has split up into two sub-groups of roughly twelve lions, lionesses, and cubs. One group claims the rocky outcrops of the savannah, and the other the riverside bushes and scrubs. They communicate and keep in touch by roaring at each other across the plains. Each group thinks the other is lazy. They are both right. Both subsist mainly on kills stolen from the hyenas.

- Lions (proud, lazy, sleepy, unhelpful)

6. Hyenas: the hyena den is a complex network of tunnels with dozens of entrances. They have a group intelligence that rivals the wisest elephants, but aren't too clever on their own. In direct competition with the lions.

- Proud, noble, hardworking, clever, tricky
- Active at night and early morning
- The real kings and queens of the jungle

GIRAFFE ENCOUNTERS

You can use the giraffe encounter table however you want, but here's what I recommend:

1. Roll 3d6. One for who, one for what, one for but.
2. Count down that many lines in each column, skipping over any crossed out items
3. Note what you got and cross it off the table.
4. Use the combination of who + what + but to create a random, imaginative encounter.
5. Repeat as many times as you like.

If any single die rolls "best leaves" then start to wrap up loose ends and towards a conclusion. Ideally one in which you finally get the best leaves!

#	Who	What	But
1	crocodile	hungry	toothache
2	mongoose	just wants to chill	snakes!
3	lion	hunting	lazy/bored
4	warthog	wallowing in mud	injured
5	zebra	on pilgrimage	fleeing
6	wildebeast	passing through	paranoid
7	humans	poaching	lost
8	wild dogs	care for the dead	it's a trap!
9	cheetah	laying an ambush	blackmail
10	giraffe	looking for a mate	way too awkward
11	elephant	digging for water	sick child at home
12	hyena	set up a lair	is a baby
best leaves

Example:

I roll 1, 3, 2: a crocodile on the hunt, but there are snakes! Play out the scenario.

For my next roll, 4, 4, 3, I count down that many on the columns, skipping what I've already rolled previously. I get zebra, on a pilgrimage, wounded. What will happen next??? Play to find out!
